

Impact of Current

GEO-POLITICAL TENSION On MARKET SENTIMENTS

The abrogation of provisions of Article 370 that granted special status to Jammu and Kashmir and the bifurcation of the state into Union Territories caused quite an upheaval in recent months. This move has worsened the already heightened tensions with neighbouring Pakistan.

Astro Economics - Time Theory - Market Psychology

Based on the planetary positions and as per our detailed analysis through astroeconomics, there are strong indications that clearly show a tough and fragile on the ground situation. The planetary positions are complex and as per our findings using our unique Time Theory, the situation will remain tense in the valley, especially with regards to article 370 and will continue gaining the attention of the world and be an area of focus till March 2020.

September and October 2019 and January 2020 could be the months that will face the highest amount of pressure. However, post January 2020, there are strong indications that the tensions will start to ease and a sense of normalcy will resume. The prevailing issues will no longer continue to be in the limelight and there will be a shift in the focus.

As per the Time Theory, there are strong indications that the market will suffer more from economic slowdowns, trade wars, and currency devaluation rather than the concern over the issue of Kashmir. Although the impact of the issue will continue to be felt in the above mentioned time frame, there are no indications of any kind of war between India and her neighbouring countries.

Although the current situation is tense, the investors will eventually ignore the ongoing geopolitical tensions and investors and FII will start participating in the market soon.
